The construction of the roadway, walks and parking will be entirely completed without cost to the purchaser of this property.

Alexandria ave., dedicated by deed of gift to public uses, with its adjoining grounds (herein offered for sale), constitutes the principal entrance to "Northwest Alexandria." Negotiations are pending between the railroad and the Northwest Alexandria Improvement Company for the construction of a convenient and tasteful station building immediately at this property, bordering the railroad tracks on the east side and Alexandria ave. on the north side.

This valuable property, divisible into about 140 lots, 50x125 feet each, it will thus be seen, is ready to be put upon the market, without the outlay of a dollar, nor will purchasers of lots be required to expend any money preparatory to building, as every foot of the property is fair, smooth and available for building purposes just as it now stands.

Further description of the property is deemed unnecessary here, as the Northwest Alexandria Improvement Company, by a generous plan of advertising its property, is incidentally making the public familiar with the property herein

OFFICE OF THE ASSESSOR, DISTRICT of Columbia, Washington, 1891.—In accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, a list will be completed by July 1, 1891, of all real property which shall have become subject to taxation, and a value affixed thereon according to the rules prescribed for assessing real estate. This assessment will include all new structures and additions to or improvements of old structures. This office should be notified as to the removal or destruction of any building since the isat assessment in order that the same may be deducted from the valuation as it now stands on the tax list. Compaints as to said assessments can only be heard and determined between the first and third Mondays of July, 1891. By order of the Commissioners. MATTHEW TRIMBLE, Assessor D. C.

HERE IT IS—JUST WHAT YOU OUGHT be heard. At the dedication, which will precede the concert, the chorus will be heard and some of the rom abroad during the session. In point of time the Swedish Male Quartet is first. This splendid organization will give two concerts. The music of the land which gave us Jenny Lind and Christine Nilsson has taken a wonderful hold upon the hearts of the American people, as has been evinced by the large and enthusiastic audiences which have assembled wherever the Swedish quartet has been announced. The music is so sweet and harmonious and so different in character from that sung by American quartets that every one who once listens to it is always anxious to hear it again. The repertoire of the quartet is a varied one, including many of the songs sung by the students of the Upsala University, Sweden, when they won the prize of 12,000 francs in the competition of all nations in Paris.

In addition to their Swedish songs the quartet ren In addition to their Swedish songs the quartet ren-ders a number of English selections, which enables them to give a most pleasing and varied program. Their singing is characterized by an elegance and vivacity which charm their audiences, and we can give them no better praise than to call attention to the re-markable character of the indorsements received dur-ing the assets that thest ng the season just past.

SIR WILLIAM LOSES Verdict for the Defendants in the Baccarat Slander Suit.

Pare 3 THE PLAINTIFF HEARS IT UNMOVED.

His Accusers Coolly Treated as They Leave the Court.

THE END OF A GREAT CASE.

AGAINST SIR WILLIAM.

Verdict in the Baccarat Slander London.

London, June 9 .- The jury in the baccarat trial today returned a verdict against Sir William Gordon Cumming. For the first time since the baccarat trial began there was a cheer for Gordon Cumming as he passed into the court room this morning. The throng outside was greater than ever and the police found it difficult to make way for those entitled to entrance. The popular excitement over the case is very great and many came in from other towns to London to see the spectacle of the prince, the accused and the galaxy of wealth, beauty and nobility, on exhibition. Sir William Gordon Cumming was evidently in better spirits than a week ago, and he took his seat with an air of confidence and a smile to his beautiful sister, Lady Middleton, who, with her husband, Lord Middleton, has stood by him from the first. Charles Russell was there and seemed to have got over the yawning habit which afflicted him when Sir Edward Clarke was addressing the jury. This yawning is a favorite trick with Sir Charles and is played by him to break the force of an opponent's questions or argument. Just as Sir Edward would be making some strong point Sir Charles Russell would stretch himself and would yawn loud enough to detract from what the other side was saying. The Prince of Wales, to the disappointment of many, was absent. He was at the Ascot races. OPENS WITH A SENSATION.

The proceedings opened with a most sense tional incident. The lord chief justice had hardly taken his seat when Gen. Owen Williams stepped to the front of the bench and and, his tace pale with emotion and his voice husky with feeling:

"My lord, I have to ask your protection.
Yesterday Sir Edward Clarke thought proper—"

Here the solicitor general, Sir Edward Clarke, sprang to his feet and, interrupting Gen. Williams, exclaimed:
"I ask your lordship to interfere and that
Gen. Williams should not be allowed to make a statement, as he has not the privilege of doing

To this Gen. Williams hotly replied in a ringing voice, all trace of huskiness having disappeared under the influence of the angry feelings which animated him:

"I was accused of an abominable charge—"
Here the lord chief justice interfered, saying:

"I do not remember the expression, but I do not think that you can be allowed to speak."

But Gen. Williams persisted in being heard. But Gen. Williams persisted in being heard, remarking angrily: "We were accused of sacrificing an innocent man. This statement was made without any evidence being brought forward for its instituction."

Mr. Miller protests most vigorously against what he calls the government's competition with labor.

"Sir Edward Clarke," said Lord Coleridge, "had said that the eye saw what the eye expected to see, and undoubtedly if persons had their minds set on certain things less proof was sufficient to satisfy them than would be otherwise needed. But the question was as to whether in this case the observation referred to would apply."

"Sir Edward Clarke," the lord chief justice continued, "had commented upon Mr. Berkeley Levett's exclamation: "Good God, Sir William Gordon Cumming caught cheating." But supposing that the remark had been "Good heavens, the archbishop of Nova Scotia, a prelate of the Order of the Sun, caught selling a living." [Laughter.] There would have been nothing unlikely in such an exclamation."

Lord Coleridge also called the attention of the jury to one particular observation which was made on behalf of the plaint during the course of the trial. It was to the effect that there was more in the case than appeared on the surface.

"Against this," the lord chief justice re-there was more in the case than appeared on the surface.

"Against this," the lord chief justice re-marked, "I most emphatically protest. The jury has nothing to do with things which are not on the surface. You have to confine your-selves to the single issue and what you have heard and what has been proved during the trial."

RECESS FOR LUNCH. When Lord Coleridge had proceeded thus far with his charge to the jury the hour of noon had arrived and the court, as usual, promptly

SUMMING UP RESUMED.

"Then as to the position of the Prince of Wales and as to the desire for secrecy manifested by the party at Tranby Croft, was it not natural that with such monarchical institutions as ours such a wish should have existed? It must be remembered that such incidents were brought before a hard judging world, not before the loyal and subscriptions world of the Tudors, but before a world whose some and indement had to be consulted. seme and judgment had to be consulted. Surely it was not to be said against a man that under these circumstances he was anxious to keep the scandal quiet."

After luncheon the lord chief justice resumed his summing up. While admitting the improbability of a man of Sir William Gordon Cumming's position and wealth lowering himself to cheat, and to cheat his friend the Prince of Wales, too, Lord Coleridge made a strong point against the plaintiff in calling the jury's attention to his failure to face his accusers. Lord Coleridge then said:

"We have now come to a very important point, in my mind. I have carefully searched for but have been unable to find any contradiction of the statement that Sir William

TILT BETWEEN COUNSEL. Sir Edward Clarke, for the plaintiff, at once rose to his feet and said that there was no evidence that Sir William Gordon Cumming had been informed of Mr. Lycett Green's desire to e confronted with him, the plaintiff. Thereupon Sir Charles Russell, for the defendant, promptly arose and read from Gen. Williams' testimony that the latter had said in court that he had informed Sir William Gordon Cumming of Mr. Lycett Green's desire to be confronted with him. Lord Coleridge, when both Sir Charles Rus-sell and Sir Edward Clarke had said all that they wished to say on the above point, dwelt at length upon it, his remarks not being in favor of the plaintiff. CONDUCT OF THE AUDITORS.

The audience, especially the fashionably dressed ladies in the galleries, paid but little attention to the summing up and charge of the lord chief justice. On the contrary, the ladies chatted together continually, occasionally raising the lorgnettes or opera glasses in order to obtain another good look at the principals in the Tranby Croft developments.
On the other hand Sir Wm. Gordon Cumming and all the defendants gave their un-divided attention to every word uttered by the ord chief justice. When the case was finally given to the jury everybody seemed relieved. JURY OUT ONLY FIFTEEN MINUTES.

From the time the jury returned to deliberate on their verdict until the moment they returned to the court room only fifteen minutes elapsed, showing apparently that they were of one opinion as to the merits of the case. Dur-ing the few minutes that the jury were out the plaintiff sat quietly in his usual seat reading a big batch of letters, in the contents of which he seemed much interested. His brother-in-law, Lord Middleton, and other friends who sat near Sir Wm. Gordon Cum ming were very nervous and clearly showed it by their actions and continuous hurried whispering.

The five defendants were also nervous and chatted in low tones with their friends, evidently being most anxious to hear the result and to get away from the scene of their seven days of torture.

When the clerk of the court suddenly anwhen the clerk of the court suddenly an-nounced that the jury was ready to report there was a movement of surprise throughout the packed audience present. Then the chatter-ing was resumed on all sides, the short absence of the jury being regarded as decidedly un-favorable to the plaintiff. Everybody may be said to have been in a breathless state when the jury re-entered their box, looking rather frightened and very nervous.

After the clerk of the court had polled the jury the lord chief justice addressing the jury "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?"
"Yes," almost whispered the foreman, standing up and bowing toward Lord Coleridge.
"Is it for the plaintiff or the defendants?"

asked the lord chief justice. "FOR THE DEFENDANTS."

"For the defendants," answered the forema in a low voice. The announcement of the verdict was re-Lord Coleridge again interrupted the gen-eral, remarking with considerable warmth: "I where the ladies congregated and upon the where the ladies congregated and upon the part of some of those in the body of the court who were in sympathy with the plaintiff. The court officers had some difficulty for some time in suppressing these marks of principally feminine disapprobation of the verdict. They were, however, eventually suppressed, and, as the court soon began to be vacated by the deeply interested, chatting audience, the curtain may be said to have been lowered over the Tranby Croft drama.

SIR WILLIAM ENMOYED

When the verdict was announced to be against Sir William Gordon Cumming, the latagainst Sir William Gordon Cumming, the lat-ter, to all appearances, was the most unmoved man in court. He folded his arms and looked straight at the jury, but otherwise did not move a muscle, his face not showing the least trace of emotion. Lady Middleton, however, flushed scarlet and then turned very pale. Mrs. Arthur Wilson and Mrs. Lycett Green were also noticed to turn pale when the verdict was rendered and were evidently heally frightend when they heard evidently badly frightened when they heard the hisses which greeted it. The two ladies mentioned stood for several minutes whisperof the defendants, unless Mr. Berkeley Levett be excepted, that anybody would have taken them for people who had just had a crushing, withering verdict rendered against them instead of being, according to the law, victors in a long series of well-contested legal battles, in which the honor of an entire family was pitted against the honor of the man who just been non-suited.

"The Wilsons win," had, as if by magic, spread from the court room to the crowd out-the court room, had remained calmly seated in his usual place. When the Wilsons had disap-peared the baronet stood up and grate-fully, smilingly shook hands with Sir Edward Clarke and with others who Edward Clarke and with others who pressed around him with many cheering words of sympathy for the man whose career was thus blighted beyond all hope. The soldierly form of Sir William, instead of shrinking beneath the blow which had been dealt him, seemed to be proudly drawn up to its full height, as he walked slowly but steadily to a little table near by.

He donned his overcoat, carefully placed his hat on his head, and, accompanied by Lord Middleton, walked out of the court by one of
